

HOW TO ADD MONEY TO GROW YOUR SUPER

We offer different options for adding money to your super so you can achieve a comfortable retirement.

You can make one-off payments at any time or set up an automatic super savings plan through your employer or bank. It can be easier to save small regular amounts than making large one-off payments.

What type of payment will give your super the biggest boost?

Before adding money to super you need to decide whether to add after-tax or before-tax money. If you're eligible, you can claim a tax deduction on certain amounts you contribute to your super. You can also choose to add money straight to your spouse's super. The differences are explained below along with details of how to make your payment. You can also find out more at mine.com.au/add-to-super

Add after-tax money

This is money you can add to your super from your take home pay or other investments or savings. If you earn less than $60,400 pa, adding after-tax money to super may qualify you to receive a government co-contribution in the 2024-25 financial year.

Ask your employer to make regular payments straight from your pay by giving them an Authority to deduct from my pay form. You can find this form at mine.com.au/super-forms

Add before-tax money

Adding money to your super from your before-tax pay is also known as salary sacrifice. This can be a good strategy to grow your super while paying less tax.

To set up regular payments into your super you need to ask your employer if they'll agree to add money from your before-tax pay. You can do this by giving them an Authority to deduct from my pay form, which you can find at mine.com.au/super-forms. You can't make one-off payments with before-tax money.

Add money to your spouse's Mine Super account

You can add money straight to your spouse's super account to build up their balance. To be eligible for a full offset your spouse must earn $37,000 or less in the financial year you contribute money on their behalf and you must add $3,000 or more. For a partial offset your spouse must earn less than $40,000 in the financial year you contribute money on their behalf. This may qualify you for a tax offset of up to $540 per year. You can't make a spouse contribution if:

- your spouse is aged 75 or older
- your contribution would make your spouse exceed their after-tax contributions cap
- your spouse has more than $1.9 million in super immediately before the start of the financial year in which you want to make the contribution.

Please note: It's important you provide the correct biller code and account number when entering your payment details, as it may not be possible to recover your money if it's paid to the wrong account.

Add money to your super and claim a tax deduction

Most people can claim their after-tax super contributions as a tax deduction until they turn 75. These amounts will count towards your before-tax contributions cap (which is $30,000 for the 2024-25 financial year) and be taxed at 15% if you earn less than $250,000 pa. If you earn over $250,000 pa you'll be taxed at 30%. People aged 67 to 74 also need to meet the 'work test' to claim this deduction. For more information visit the Australian Taxation Office website at ato.gov.au

To claim your after-tax contributions as a tax deduction, please send us a completed Notice of intent to claim or vary a deduction for personal super contributions form when making your payment. You can find this form at mine.com.au/super-forms. Otherwise, we'll process your payment as an after-tax contribution.

Are you 75 or over?

Once you turn age 75, we can only accept mandated employer super contributions and downsizer contributions.

Keep an eye on how much you're adding to super each financial year

The government limits how much you can add to your super each year and still receive a tax concession. These limits are called contribution caps. To find out more, read our factsheet How much can I add to my super account? at mine.com.au/super-pds
